

The Amazon Rainforest

I imagine you are stood in the Amazon Rainforest at dawn, the golden shimmering sun rising, emerging from the dark.

In the vivid green jungle, birds chirp whilst you pass by.

It is peaceful and is calm. Suddenly in the tree there is a rustle and you are curious. A small chocolate brown spider monkey is stood right in front of you holding a tropical fruit. You travel west into the gloomy shadows with the spider monkey trailing behind you. As everything comes into view, you discover a crystal clear waterfall leading into a lagoon of pearly waters. Welcome to the Amazon rainforest.

The Amazon Rainforest

Above your head, you feel a gentle breeze and hear the emerald coloured trees sway amongst the cool, soft winds. You start to walk and feel the cold, cobalt river submerging your feet. As you walk out of the river, you hear birds chirping softly and other animals moving rapidly. The winds start to get stronger and you grab onto a rough, jade coloured tree to stop it moving you into the slightly chocolate brown coloured river, packed with crocodiles.

As the catastrophic weather settles, you take your grip off the tree and ahead of you is a bright, blinding whiteness of mist that could shower a small monkey if it was turned back into water. You look behind you because you want to explore more but you see a golden and raven coloured jaguar crouching behind you, ready to pounce at you. So you run as fast a speedy, confident cheetah to the nearest tree to climb to the highest altitude so you would keep your life, and not witness death. Once the jaguar has surrendered, you climb back down below you and walk into the misty, fallen cloud.

Through this unusual, damp cloud, you see a lovely, majestic paradise for animals. In front of you, there is a stunning waterfall and beside you, there are many species of different types of animals like: birds, mammals, reptiles, amphibians and bugs. As you walk into this new world, you fill with excitement and joy as you drink the crystal clear water and consume the tasty fruits and berries that smell so fresh. Welcome to the Amazon Rainforest, home to most of the world's species of plants and animals.

Inside the Amazon Rain Forest

Below your feet you feel the wavy grass tickle your shins. You are then drawn to the splashes of the salty pond water and the howls of the viciously moving trees. By the mythical pond, you spot a cave full of overgrown but soft weed, keeping sheltered from the booming rain. You then attempt climbing through the layers of vivid weed, dragging your fingers through it as you go. Still surrounded in the dense weed, your eyes light up as you meet with the blinding, fiery sunlight. Slowly, emerging from the weed, you cover your eyes not realising what you stepped into.

You freeze for a second before taking your dirty hands away to see you stepped into a muddy, moss covered swamp. Silver down fish then dash towards you so you jump out into the glistening opening. Above your head, brown birds flap their wings as they rise higher into the sapphire sky. Welcome to the Amazon Rain Forest, home to the tallest trees and biggest bushes.
